Reproductive Endocrinology and Infertility

April 3-4, 2008

COURSE CHAIR
Marcelle I. Cedars, MD
Professor, Department of Obstetrics, Gynecology and Reproductive Sciences; Director, Division of Reproductive Endocrinology

Hilton San Francisco
Financial District
San Francisco, CA
The practicing clinician in obstetrics and gynecology is faced with common endocrinopathies, both medical and reproductive, in every day practice. This course will address a variety of medical and reproductive topics to assist the clinician practicing office-based gynecology. This program will be divided into three sections to allow a thorough discussion of each topic, including menopause, polycystic ovarian syndrome, and a full-day on office-based infertility, including issues such as management of endometriosis and uterine fibroids. Individualization of care will be discussed and emphasized.

An attendee completing this course should be able to:

• Discuss treatment issues affecting menopausal patients in the post-WHI world;
• Treat polycystic ovarian syndrome, and other disorders of ovulatory function, addressing the patients’ immediate concerns, while promoting long-term strategies to decrease health risk;
• Design a treatment plan for patients with advanced age and unexplained infertility;
• Discuss the role of herbal products, acupuncture and psychological stress on infertility management;
• Understand the indications for surgical management for common gynecological problems.
